

TIME SCHOOL

WE WILL REMEMBER THEM

Nikki Young

KEY SELLING POINTS

- The first in a series of books exploring the effect of the past on our present lives
- Nikki's work has received attention from publications such as Writing Magazine and Parent Talk
- Will appeal to readers aged 9-11 years who enjoy action and adventure stories, and fans of Nikki's previous book

In the first book of Nikki Young's Time School series, a run of mini disasters means that school friends, Jess, Nadia, Tomma and Ash barely make it to the station in time to catch their train to school. Upon arrival they find a surprising change to the usual packed commuter train, one that seems to take forever to reach Hickley town.

When the children arrive, something doesn't feel right. Some of the buildings are missing and their school looks far newer than usual. And to top it all off, the children don't recognise any of the other pupils who are all dressed in a different uniform. The only person who seems to take any notice of the friends is Martha, a young girl who is very worried about her family being hungry and her brother who is away fighting on the front line. The children soon realise that this is no ordinary day.

When the friends get home, the realisation of what happened begins to sink in. But will they get to see Martha and the other pupils again? Jess hopes so. She has something she needs to tell Martha. Not knowing why or how, she feels a connection to this girl that she can't explain.

NIKKI YOUNG is a copywriter and children's creative writing tutor, and writes every day whether for business, her blog or her fiction work. When not writing, her creative writing club, Storymakers, provides workshops and courses for children aged 7 years and over. Her first novel, The Mystery of the Disappearing Underpants, was published by Matador in 2017.
